NATO: Conventional Defense Issue

//Allied opposition to issuing a separate charter on conventional defense at the summit in Bonn has been overcome by including an additional document on arms control.// [redacted] 25X1 25X6

//France, because it is not a member of the integrated command structure, preferred that detailed defense commitments be included in the separate declaration to which it will not subscribe. The other Allies wanted to encourage closer French association with NATO and saw a single declaration with French endorsement as a step in that direction.// [redacted] 25X1

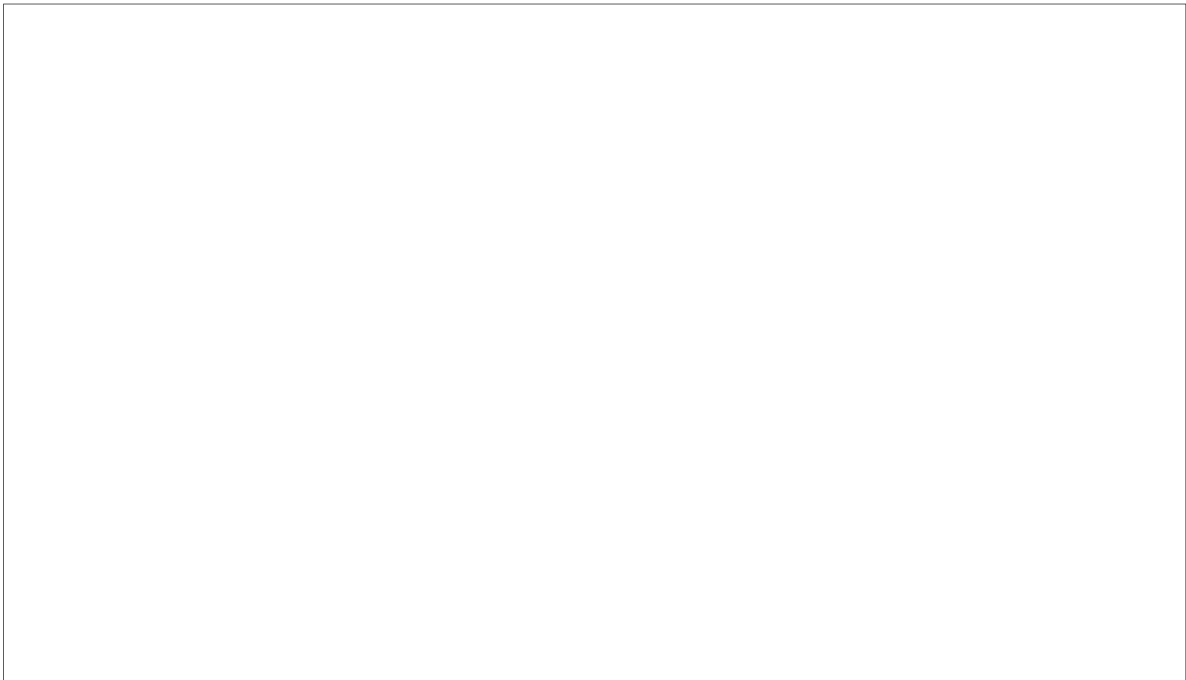

Comment: //Following the summit, the Allies are likely to aim for arms control progress--particularly INF and MBFR--and not for improving conventional capabilities. Economic difficulties already prevent most from meeting existing conventional force goals. [redacted] 25X6

EL SALVADOR: Status of Government Offensive

Comment: //The offensive in Chalatenango appears to be going well despite the insurgents' decision to avoid contact. The operation should disrupt the guerrilla support network in the area at least temporarily.

INTERNATIONAL: Nonaligned Criticism of the US

Cuba scored a major victory at the ministerial conference of the nonaligned movement held last week in Havana. The conference communique accuses the US of "imperialism" in El Salvador, Nicaragua, Guatemala and Grenada. This marks the first time that the movement has gone on record condemning US policy in Central America.

Comment: Cuba used its power as chairman of the movement to blunt efforts by moderates to delete or to soften anti-US language in the communique. The Cubans want the movement to retain its anti-US bias when they transfer the chairmanship to Iraq at the summit scheduled for September in Baghdad. The meeting in Havana laid the groundwork for the summit, and the condemnation of US policy in Central America probably will be repeated in the summit's communique.
